Texture, it's something that I look for in works of art. There are these wonderful Body Masks, that scream out, "Touch me, touch me!" These fibrous skirts, wood, paint that looks like beading. The purpose is to commemorate someone after they've passed away. It's something physical, something that invites touch to maintain that connection.

Textiles, to archaeologists anyway, can mean woven cloth, bags, nets, basketry, string-making, cord impressions in pots, sandals, or other objects created out of organic fibers. This technology is at least 30,000 years old, although preservation of the textiles themselves is rare in prehistory, so it may be quite a bit older still.
